

FOURTH DAY'S MEETING

Of the Prohibition Assembly at Moundsville.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC SCORED.

And Public Men Condemned for Their Cowardice in Face of the Evils of the Rum Power—The Physical, Financial and Political Conflict the Prohibitionists are Leading—An Entertaining Lecture About London.

The fourth day's meeting of the Prohibition assembly was held yesterday at the Moundsville camp grounds, and the interest seems to be unabated. At 8:30 a. m. Miss Newcomb's class gave a pleasing exhibition in physical culture and Delsartean exercises.

Dr. Hattie B. Jones was down on the programme to lead the "White Cross" work, but owing to pressing engagements elsewhere was unable to be present. She will be on the grounds to-day, however, and will conduct her work. In Dr. Jones's place Mrs. C. E. Jackson led a meeting on "Evangelistic Work," though she was on the programme for to-day. The main idea, as enunciated in Mrs. Jackson's brief talk, was, that it was almost impossible to conduct gospel temperance meetings on the old line, and that other questions would creep in. Mrs. Jackson asked those who were in favor of work more aggressive than that of the old style temperance methods to rise to their feet, and a good many arose. Besides Mrs. Jackson talks were given by Mrs. Mann, of Salt Lake City; Mrs. Jennie Sisson, state president of the W. C. T. U.; Mrs. J. L. Hobbs, formerly of Wheeling, and Mrs. Williams, of Ohio. Capt. Frank Burr, of Manington, gave an interesting talk. The evangelistic work meeting was well attended, and the speakers and the audience showed an intensity of purpose very favorable to the prospects of the cause.

At 10:30 a. m. Miss Vandellia Varum delivered an address entitled "The Conflict—What and Whose." Miss Varum divided her discourse into three heads, the physical, the financial and the political conflict.

THE APPETITE FOR DRINK, which those in favor of the suppression of the liquor traffic had to contend with, was the hardest of all opposition to overcome, but the appetite would cease, when the means of satisfying it could not be obtained. The purse was also arrayed against the principle for which the Prohibitionists contended. The money invested in distilleries and breweries, the deprivation which, it was assumed, so many would suffer, if the market for their barley, rye, corn and grapes were taken away, all these elements were strong in opposition to the suppression of the liquor traffic.

Miss Varum roundly scored the cowardice of public men generally who fear to oppose the saloon power in politics, no one daring to speak out. The lamentable conditions surrounding the public service received their due share of attention from the speaker, and the partnership, as she called it, between the government and the saloon, the former pocketing some of the profits.

At 2:30 p. m. Hon. M. V. Bennett, of Kansas, spoke. He treated at length of the differences between the Prohibition convention at Cincinnati, and those at Minneapolis and Chicago, and repeated the favorable comments on the delegates made by the Cincinnati newspapers.

In the evening Mr. John R. Clarke, of New York, delivered his popular lecture, "To and Fro in London." He had a very good audience and frequent applause punctuated his telling points. A bare synopsis of his lecture gives no idea of Mr. Clarke's eloquence, his transitions from the gay to the sad and his eloquent action, alternately moving to tears and laughter. He did not lead his audience through London, reciting like a paid guide historical incidents that occurred in the places he described, but interlarded his relation with poetry, anecdotes and beautiful descriptions.

SYNOPSIS OF MR. CLARKE'S LECTURE. "See Venice and die," said Mr. Clarke, "is an old saying, but after seeing London one would want to live on." He said he would not bore his audience with statistics of that great metropolis. Starting from the spot where Dr. Johnson and Boswell stood, at St. Paul's cathedral, he would from there meander with his audience over London. To go to London without seeing St. Paul's was like going to Rome without seeing the Vatican or that exquisite ruin, the colosseum. With his audience he visited the tombs of Lord Wilson and the Duke of Wellington, and warmly eulogized both great heroes.

Taking a seat on an omnibus, he took his audience to view the spectacular immensity of London. In relating about some of the "spectacular bric-a-brac" of London, the lecturer told of some of the street scenes of London, but incidentally said that "America stands to-day without a shadow of the doubt, the incomparable mistress of the world." Some of the comic signs on the taverns, the "Three Loggerheads," the eleven monkeys, the spectator making the eleventh, were comically illustrated by the lecturer. Going down Cheapside by old Bow church, over London bridge, over which no man can pass from eight in the morning until six in the evening without seeing a gray horse. He quoted Thackeray's, Lord Bulwer's, Thomas Hood's, Charles Dickens's description of the immense throng constantly streaming across London bridge. Standing on the bridge he showed his audience "Little Hell," Wilkins Micawber, Fagan the Jew and many other characters from Charles Dickens's works. "If you ever go to London, stand on London bridge, and look at the stream, the mightiest stream (of humanity) that courses."

A warm eulogy on the late Charles H. Spurgeon, the great Baptist preacher of London, was pronounced by Mr. Clarke, and his panegyric was loudly applauded by the audience. He spoke of the persecutions suffered by Dr. Spurgeon from the public press and cartoonists, but character, said he, was like rosemary—the more you pound it the sweeter and stronger.

ITS FRAGRANCE GROWS. Character was above all creeds, and if there were a moral custodian at the gates of gold he would tell that the survival of the fittest is brought about through character.

Roland Hill, the great preacher of Black Friars, was spoken of in an alternately comic and pathetic manner, and the lecturer delightfully recounted some of the small troubles, caused by millinery, between Brother Hill and his wife, Roland Hill, for his work among the lower classes, and his conversion of the drunkard, was thrillingly commented upon by Mr. Clarke.

In Fleet street Mr. Clarke sold papers in his boyhood. Turning into the old tavern that Dr. Johnson used to visit, and where Henry Fielding, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Edmund Burke, Oliver Goldsmith and David Garrick sat, and going on to where William Cowper studied law, the lecturer brought vividly to his hearers, minds the scenes of those days.

The "Strand," with its 678 places of amusement, gave the lecturer occasion to protest against keeping the Columbian exposition open on Sunday. He would rather, he said, that all the work done and all the buildings already erected a Chicago for the exposition be moved out to the depths of Lake Michigan, rather than that the Sabbath should be desecrated by opening the gates of the exposition on that day. Charlotte Cushman and Edwin Forrest were then seen in their creations by the lecturer, and Artemus Ward's panoramic exhibition was reproduced by Mr. Clarke, in his inimitable imitation of Artemus' comic drawl.

Madame Tussaud's wax works exhibition was the occasion for the lecturer to utter an impassioned eulogy of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, and his utterance of patriotic home rule sentiments [Mr. Clarke is an Irishman] was loudly applauded by the audience. General Grant, whose wax figure stands in Madame Tussaud's hall, was compared and considered equal to Hannibal, Caesar, Wellington and Napoleon, and Abraham Lincoln was characterized as "the greatest American, living or dead."

Following is to-day's programme:
8:30 a. m. Miss Newcomb's class.
9:30 a. m. White Cross work, led by Dr. Hattie Jones.
10:30 a. m. Address, P. A. Burdick, of New York.
2:30 p. m. Lecture, John R. Clarke.
7:30 p. m. Address, Hon. M. V. Bennett.

Two Valises Missing.

Yesterday Charles Wren, a traveling man, set two valises in the back room at L. Riester's Opera House saloon. When he went to get them several hours later they were not there. When notified the police that they had been stolen, but could give no clue to the thief.

It was suggested that perhaps the valises had been accidentally mixed with the luggage of the Jack Boss fishing club, which left for camp yesterday, but this is not definitely known to be true.

A Young Traveling Man Arrested on a Serious Charge.

HE HAD APPROPRIATED THE FUNDS

Collected for his Employer, and when The Discovery of his Crime Seamed Imminent, Fled from the City. Found by the Police down the River and Brought back and Looked up.

George Johnson, a young man who lives in East Wheeling, and has been employed as a traveling salesman by S. Baer's Sons, was arrested down at Franklin, a station on the Ohio river road, yesterday morning, on a warrant issued by Squire D. Z. Phillips, on a charge of grand larceny. He was brought to the city and lodged in the lockup to await a preliminary hearing.

Johnson, it is alleged, has been appropriating to his own use funds belonging to his employers for some time past. Within the week or two last past he is accused of having so stolen about $200, and so far as is definitely known the sums he has embezzled will aggregate over $600. The affidavit on which the warrant was issued accuses him of the larceny of about $600.

On his rounds as a salesman Johnson was also entrusted with the duty of collecting from his patrons. In this way he came into the possession of the sums he is accused of having kept instead of turning them over to his employers.

Recently the firm has become suspicious for some reason that all was not straight in Johnson's accounts, and becoming aware that he was an object of suspicion he fled from the city.

The chief of police received a quiet tip that the man was down at Franklin. Armed with the warrant sworn out by Mr. Baer, Lieutenants Terrill and Lukins went down yesterday morning and had no difficulty in finding and arresting their man.

The firm declared an intention to prosecute him to the extent of the law. The worst feature of the thing is not the loss of the money, but the confusion into which it throws the accounts of the house. It will require a great deal of trouble to ascertain just how much Johnson had collected, and from whom.

Last evening Johnson was arraigned before Squire Phillips and held in $1,000 bonds, Tom Halpin becoming his surety.

A Colored Boy Embezzler.

William Starks, a colored boy who works for Capt. John Crookard, on the wharfboat, was arrested yesterday by Officer West on a charge of embezzling about $100 from Captain Crookard. The boy claimed that he had paid back part of the money, and to have a promise from his employer that he would not prosecute him, but as Captain Crookard was out of the city, the boy was held to await his return.

Later it was learned that the facts were as follows: Last Friday Starks being absent from the wharfboat at noon, and having on his person about $100 of the wharfboat's money, the impression was that something was wrong, but he returned in the evening and made good the amount, less $20, which he promised to pay in the future. This being explained the boy was released.

COLLINS-ROGERS.

A Quiet, but Pretty, Wedding on North Main Street Yesterday.

There was a quiet, but pleasant, wedding on North Main street last evening, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Rogers. Rev. J. F. Chenoweth, pastor of the North street church, officiated, and the contracting parties were Mr. Thomas Collins and Miss Hattie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rogers. The ceremony was witnessed only by the relatives and close friends of the couple.

The presents were numerous, elegant and useful, and gave good evidence of the popularity of the two young people, both of whom are held in high esteem by all who know them.

Mr. and Mrs. Collins will go to house-keeping in a commodious residence on North Main street, which he recently built and furnished nicely. They will have the best wishes of all their friends for a long and happy married life.

Many persons are unable to sleep on their left side. The cause has long been a puzzle to physicians.
